DEBR!S

DON'T MISS THIS!

The 2004 Snow Sport Expos

Ever been inside a ski shop with more square footage than most airport terminals? For a few bucks, you can have the ultimate browsing experience at BEWI SnowSports Expos this November. Coming to six major snow-savvy cities—New York, Boston, Hartford, Denver, Portland, and Seattle—these gigantic shows are the best place to check out the latest gear, find season-pass and lift-ticket deals, meet pros, and get the skinny on industry haps. You can spend hour upon hour losing yourself in endless mazes of booths, demo centers, mini skateparks, and concessions. Or find the screaming guy with the funny hat and the sumo-wrestling suits. Tell him FREEZE sent ya!

www.bewisports.com/2004_expos

October 28–31
Nassau Coliseum
Long Island-Uniondale, NY

November 5–7
Hartford Civic Center
Hartford, CT

November 5–7
Colorado Convention Center
Denver, CO

November 5–7
Portland Expo Center
Portland, OR

November 12–14
Stadium Exhibition Center
Seattle, WA

November 18–21
Bayside Expo Center
Boston, MA

FREEZE GUIDE TO PERFORMANCE-ENHANCING DRUGS

The Top-Secret KGB Hangover Helper

There's nothing like a bellyful of vodka to keep you and your comrades warm during a long Russian winter. Conversely, there's nothing like waking up with a splitting hangover, especially if you work for the KGB.

Faced with this conundrum at the end of the Cold War, Soviet scientists went to work. After several tests (there were no shortage of volunteers) they came up with an "anti-drunkenness" pill intended to keep thirsty KGB agents sober while their shot-pounding subjects slurred out national-security secrets. Sadly, the formula didn't work. The Russian spies got saucier than Gorbachev on Christmas, but with one important difference—they woke up hangover-free. Allegedly.

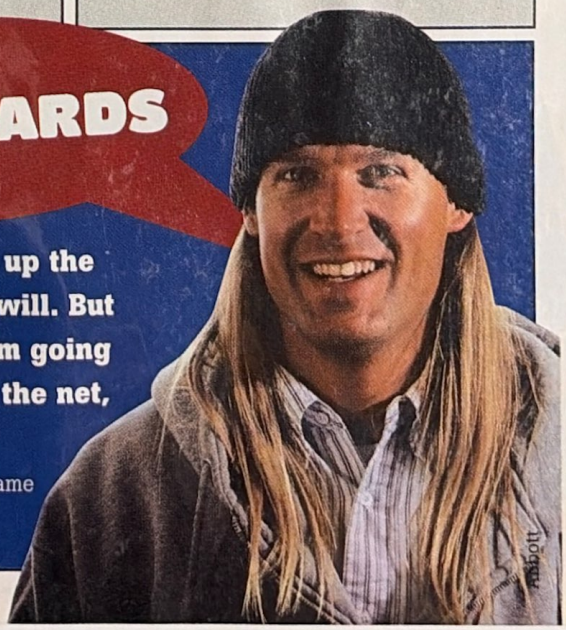
The pills, cleverly renamed "RU-21," are now readily available here in the U.S., and we at FREEZE nobly took it upon ourselves to test them out. After a long night of chasing every other drink with one serving, as directed, we woke up feeling like we'd all been drop-kicked in the head by a ski boot. What gives? Either the KGB hangover pill doesn't work, or those KGB agents are way, way tougher than us. Wait … don't answer that.—Jeff Foss

OVERHEARDS

"In one more year, I'm legal. And then it's on, Burke!"
—Simon Dumont to Sarah Burke

"They were alternately in awe and terrified."
—High North Founder Shane Szocs on the adult campers meeting a tipsy Nick Mercon

"I'm ready! Now stop sucking!"
—PBP's Johnny Decesare while filming with Pete Olenick

"Pretty much nothing doesn't go good with bacon—except maybe ice cream."
—Smith Sport Marketing Director Tag Kleiner


"If I've got time to set up the two-hand backhand I will. But if it's coming in hot, I'm going to lob her high, get to the net, and dominate you."
—Greg Tuffelmire on his tennis game