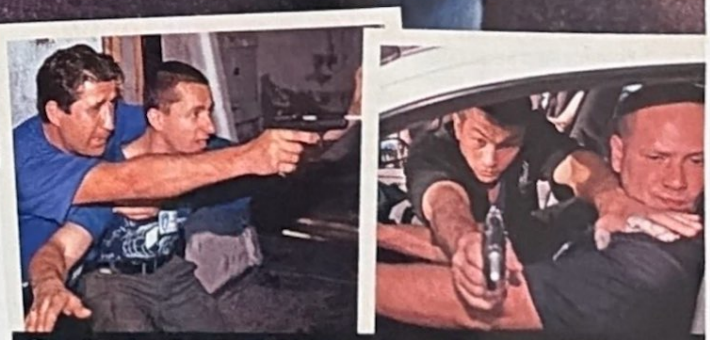
The tighter the jeans, the better the aim.

TOP BODYGUARDS ON HIGH-PROFILE ASSIGNMENTS CAN EARN MORE THAN $1,000 A DAY!

OVERLY PROTECTIVE

EARN A MASTER'S DEGREE IN TOUGH GUY-OLOGY.

Most red-blooded Americans would sooner shoot their boss than take a bullet for him. And rightfully so! But if defending foreign dignitaries (or bitch-slapping slimy Us Weekly photographers) sounds like your dream job, then why not enroll in bodyguard school? With intensive 28-day courses in Ecuador ($10,470) and Florida ($4,970), the Center for Advanced Security Studies will whip you into a close-protection officer faster than you can say, "Kevin Costner blows, and Whitney Houston can't sing!" The syllabus is brutal: 12 to 16 hours a day of sophisticated awareness drills, covert surveillance techniques, instinctive marksmanship tactics (you'll expend some 3,500 rounds) and reflexive disarming methods. Fewer than half of your classmates will complete the training and be deemed suitable for live operations, but if you make the cut, you'll be on your way to earning a cool $2,000 to $3,000 a week, plus expenses. And you'll never even have to take off your dark sunglasses! Suck it, condescending high-school guidance counselor. bodyguardschool.com



Close friends and designated drivers make excellent human shields.

A-HOLE ALERT! HOW TO RECOGNIZE AN ASSAILANT

How not to guard Lee Harvey.

1 LOOK AT HIS HANDS. Does the sketchball in question have something suspicious in his grasp? He could be hiding a gun.

2 PEER INTO HIS EYES. Are they shifty? Bugged out? He might be signaling to his cohorts or preparing to attack.

3 EXAMINE HIS CLOTHES. Is this shady character strangely overdressed? He may have something up his sleeve—literally.