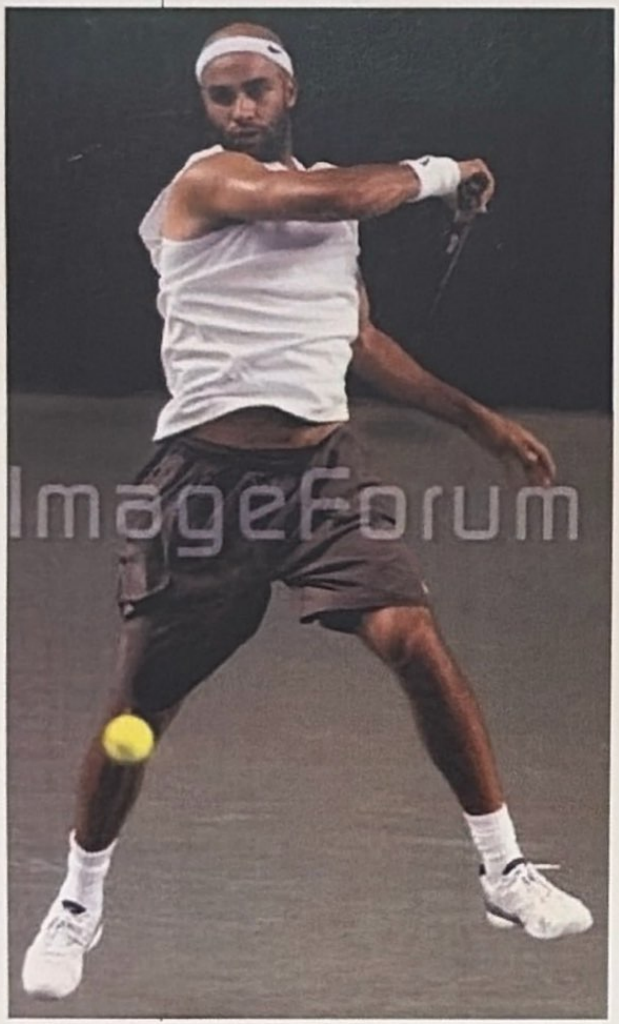
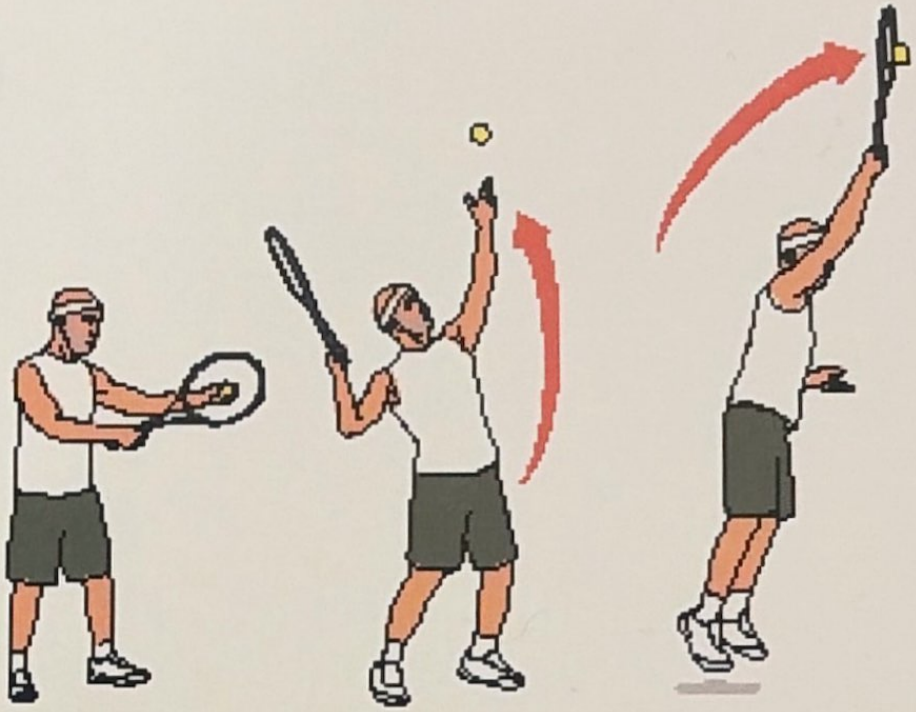
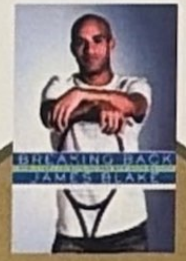
BASELINE BADASS



Game, Set, Kill!

ATP assassin James Blake steps up your court-crushing prowess.





Read all about Blake's recovery from injury in his new book, Breaking Back.

1. Grip the racket like you're shaking hands with it, keeping your index and middle fingers separated for better control. Position your body almost perpendicular to the net.

2. Initiate the serving motion during the first part of your toss, bending your legs and turning slightly forward as the ball rises. Toss it as high as you can possibly reach with your racket.

3. Just as the ball begins to drop, connect full-throttle with the dead-center sweet spot. Don't force a jump—if your feet leave the ground, it should be a by-product of the power in your swing.
