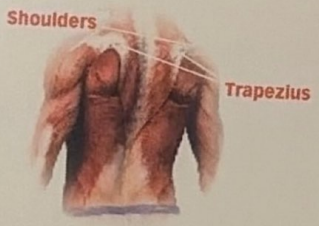
BATTLE-HARDENED

Combat Ready

Let IFL coach and general MMA legend Pat Miletich transform you into a human wrecking ball.

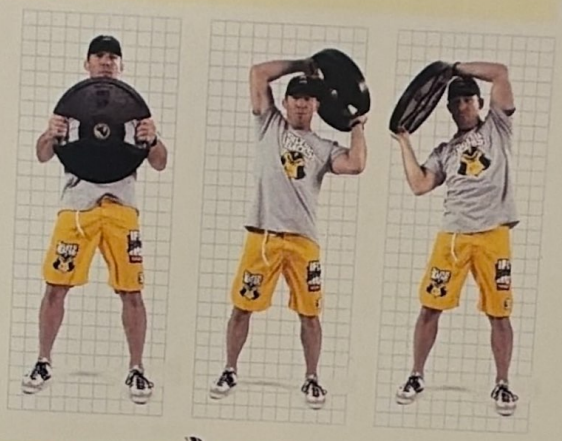


Miletich's International Fight League squad won the last two titles without a single loss.

Pat Miletich

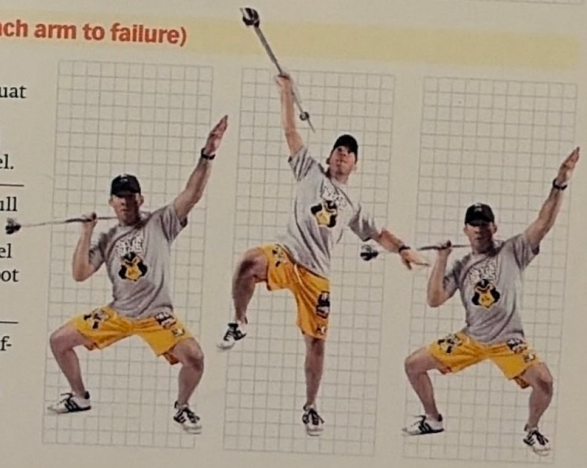
Plate Rotations (three sets of 20, both directions)

1. Get a 25- to 45-pound plate, ideally one with handles, and hold it in front of you like a steering wheel.
2. Move the plate as if you were putting on a scarf. Bring it as far behind your head as possible.
3. The circular motion works on your traps and every shoulder muscle. Change your direction and repeat.



Barbell Press (three sets with each arm to failure)

1. Start in a "warrior position," a half-squat with your free arm up, and a 45-pound bar at shoulder level.
2. Explode up into a full extension, raising the bar until the heel of your grounded foot comes up.
3. Drop back into a half-squat, making sure to keep the bar from rotating and knocking you out cold.



Towel and Weight Punching Drill (three sets, 30 seconds each)

1. Pinch a small towel between your chin and the lead shoulder in your fighting stance.
2. Keep the towel pinched tight and alternate between throwing lefts and rights rapidly.
3. The drill teaches you to keep your head down in the ring. And that will keep your teeth in your head.

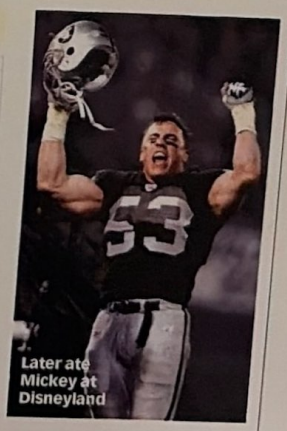
GET HUGE

Bill's Pills

Maxim nutrition expert Bill Romanowski weighs in on protein power.

Pro athletes ingest massive amounts of protein to perform, but if you're a normal guy looking to muscle up, it's the perfect starter supplement. I recommend around 25 grams between breakfast and lunch, between lunch and dinner, and before bed. If this sort of intake is too much, well, you'll probably have extreme gas. Trust your body and take a little less the next day. Eventually, you'll figure out the optimal amount.

Bill Romanowski, president and CEO of Nutrition 53 (nutrition53.com)



Later ate Mickey at Disneyland

Grooming, Sacha Harford for aartistsoft.com

Photograph by Edward Smith