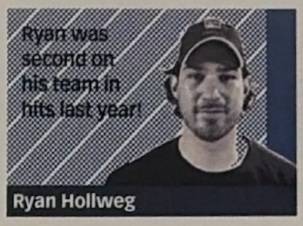
SKATE AND DESTROY

Quad Stacker Deluxe

NHL-hardened New York Rangers center Ryan Hollweg locks your quivering legs in the penalty box and lectures them on strength and balance.



Ryan Hollweg

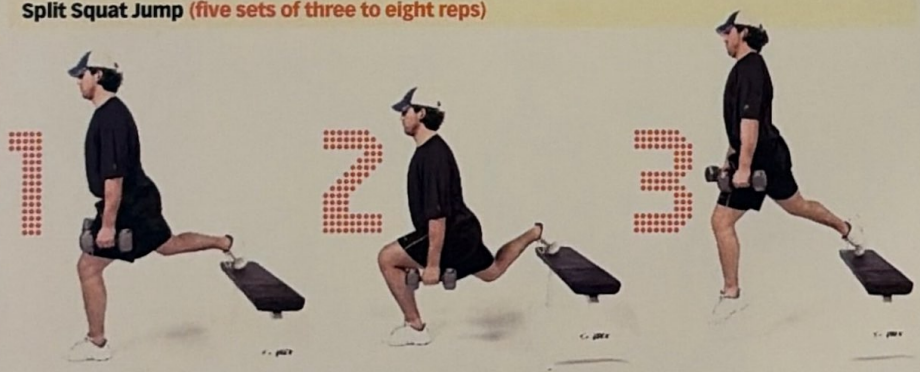
Skater Stride Jump (three sets of eight reps)

1 Balance on one leg holding a 25-pound plate like a really heavy steering wheel. Crouch down.

2 Leap to the other side as far as you can, swinging your jumping leg around in a skating motion.

3 As you land, be careful not to lower the weight or let your upper body fall forward.

Split Squat Jump (five sets of three to eight reps)

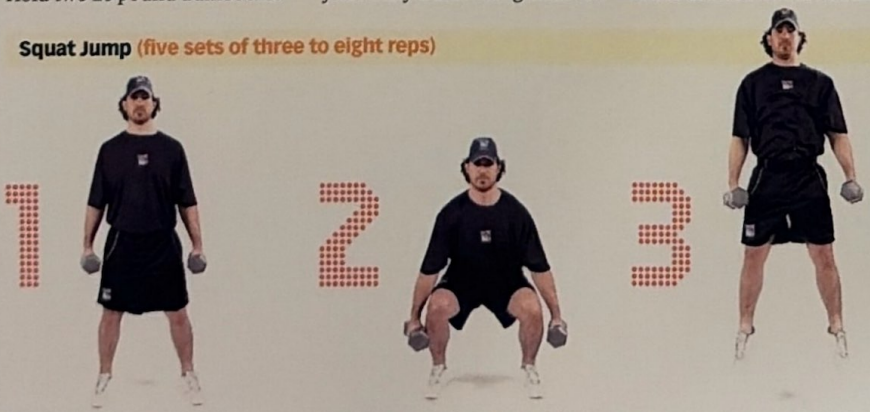


1 Get into a lunge position with your back foot up on a bench. Hold two 20-pound dumbbells.

2 Keeping your chest upright and toes in front of your knee, lower your hefty frame straight down.

3 Explode upward with your front leg, jumping as high as possible. Brace that toe on the bench.

Squat Jump (five sets of three to eight reps)



1 Stand on a flat surface with your back straight. Hold two 20-pound dumbbells at your sides.

2 Drop into a half-squat position, keeping your eyes straight ahead as you lower your body.

3 Explode upward as high as possible, land, regain your balance, and start all over again.

GET HUGE

Bill's Pills

Romanowski plus creatine equals win.

Creatine
This is a phenomenal supplement—any organization that tells you otherwise isn't paying attention to the research. If you're taking it, keep in mind that your body can only utilize 2–3 g. per day (the rest you'll just piss out).

White Grape Juice
For optimal effects, mix your creatine with white grape juice and drink it within five minutes of lifting. This way when you hit the gym the next day, it will already be driven into your muscle cells, ready to work.

Magnesium Supplement
To steer clear of occasional side effects like cramping, simply take a magnesium supplement like ZMA. Get it in my new nighttime sleep formula, Sleep1, available at nutrition53.com. Now go forth and lift!

Grooming, Sacha Harford for aartistloft.com.
Bill Romanowski is president and CEO of Nutrition 53 (nutrition53.com).

Photographs by Edward Smith